Samsung, Lenovo's China supplier denies using child workers

Brijing/Seoul, Aug 28: A China-based supplier for Samsung Electronics and Lenovo Group on Thursday said it had never hired child labourers, denying allegations by a US-based group.

Samsung Electronics said it had found no children or students working on the production line at the Huizhou-based factory of supplier HEG Technology, which was cited as violating China's labour laws by the New York-based watchdog China Labor Watch.

A Lenovo spokeswoman said the company would look into the report. In a statement, China Labor Watch said it had found more than 10 children working at the HEG factory during an investigation in July and August. It also said the probe had found over 100 student workers who were not being paid overtime wages or a night shift subsidy.

The watchdog said it had shared the evidence with Samsung last week and that Samsung demanded the supplier pay some students' wages. It did not say whether Samsung took any action on the matter of child labour or whether it had reached out to Lenovo with the information. An employee named Zeng at HEG Technology's human resources department told Reuters that the company had never hired children, and that it had facial recognition systems in place to ensure workers were not under age. Reuters
