Khalaf becomes first woman to edit Financial Times in its 131-year history

KATE HOLTON
London, November 12

ROULA KHALAF will become the first woman to edit the Financial Times in its 131-year history after Lionel Barber said he would step down in January. Khalaf served as deputy editor, foreign editor and Middle East editor during her more than two decades at the salmon-pink newspaper. In recent years she has sought to increase the number of female readers and journalists at the title.

"It's a great honour to be appointed editor of the FT, the greatest news organisation in the world," she said. "I look forward to building on Lionel Barber's extraordinary achievements and am grateful for his mentorship through the years."

Khalaf, from Lebanon, will join Katharine Viner at the Guardian as one of the few women to edit major newspapers in Britain. Prior to joining the FT in 1995, she worked at Forbes magazine in New York and holds a master's degree from Columbia University.

Tsunee Kita, chairman of Nikkei, said Khalaf had been selected for her sound judgement and integrity. "We look forward to working closely with her to deepen our global media alliance," he said in a statement. Barber, the most senior financial journalist in the country, will step down after 14 years as editor and 34 years at the newspaper.

During his time he engineered a successful push into online subscription that protected the title as others battled plummeting advertising revenue, and managed the move to a new office after Japan's Nikkei bought the FT from Pearson in 2015.

The FT passed the milestone of one million paying readers in 2019, with digital subscribers accounting for more than 75% of total circulation.

As editor Barber also interviewed a raft of world leaders and most recently made headlines in June when Russia's Vladimir Putin told him that liberalism had become obsolete.

The newspaper has also come under fire from some leading members of the governing Conservative Party, including Prime Minister Boris Johnson, for what they perceive to be critical coverage of Britain's vote to leave the European Union.

Nikkei's Kita said Barber had transformed the FT newspaper into a digital-first operation. Describing him as a strategic thinker and true internationalist, he said it was very sad to see him leave the FT. —REUTERS

Apple card's gender-bias claims look familiar to old-school banks

BLOOMBERG
New York, November 12

APPLE FITCHES ITS new card as a model of simplicity and transparency, upending everything consumers think about credit cards.

But for the card's overseers at Goldman Sachs Group Inc., it's creating the same headaches that have bedeviled an industry the company had hoped to disrupt.

Social media postings in recent days by tech entrepreneur and Apple co-founder Steve Wozniak complaining about unequal treatment of their wives ignited a firestorm that's engulfed the two giants of Silicon Valley and Wall Street, casting a pall over what the companies had claimed was the most successful launch of a credit card ever.

Goldman has said it's done nothing wrong. There's been no evidence that the bank, which decides who gets an Apple Card and how much they can borrow, intentionally discriminated against women. But that may be the point, according to critics.

The complex models that guide its lending decisions may inadvertently produce results that disadvantage certain groups.

"In Washington, it's referred to as 'disparate impact' — is one the financial industry has spent years trying to address.

The increasing use of algorithms in lending decisions has sharpened the years-long debate, as consumer advocates, armed with what they claim is supporting research, are pushing regulators and companies to rethink whether models are only entrenching discrimination that algorithm-driven lending is meant to stamp out.

Because machines can treat similarly situated people and objects differently, research is starting to reveal some troubling examples in which the reality of algorithmic decision-making falls short of our expectations, or is simply wrong," Nicol Turner Lee, a fellow at the Center for Technology Innovation at the Brookings Institution, recently told Congress.

Wozniak and David Heinemeier Hansson said on Twitter that their wives were given significantly lower limits on their Apple Cards, despite sharing finances and filing joint tax returns.

Wozniak said he and his wife reported the same income and have a joint bank account, which should mean that lenders view them as equals.

Google sued London cabby who named his firm Google

ALPHABET'S "MIGHTY" GOOGLE faced an unlikely figure in a London's court on Monday: a cab driver from South London.

The research firm sued Google's sole trader Sohail Nagi for £10,000 ($12,800), arguing the cabbie had been "unfairly free-riding off its reputation by presenting the company name in Google's style — using a very similar font and color scheme as the tech giant's logo.

In 2012, after a two-month discussion with Google, Nagi agreed to change his logo to black with cricket balls in place of the O's to represent the cricket team for a slow spinning ball — a "googly." Google's lawyer Maxwell Kay said this had been implemented, however, and the logo was only changed this year, after the firm had filed its suit against the taxi company.

Judge Gordon Nurse ruled in favour of the company after it agreed to cap its legal costs at 10,000 pounds, about half of what it incurred, which Nurse called "a very generous limit." Nagi was ordered to pay the sum within 18 days and was warned that Google could make a claim against his home in London's Mitcham neighborhood if he failed to do so.

"In a very poor man and it's very hard to survive," Nagi told the court. —BLOOMBERG
